Chevron's response

19 May 2020

Business & Human Rights Resource Centre invited Chevron to respond to the following:

- 2020 Anti-Chevron Day event: https://www.facebook.com/events/227725785195411/
- The True Cost of Chevron: https://truecostofchevron.com

Chevron sent the following response:

"Protecting people and the environment are core values at Chevron. We strive to enable human progress in a sustainable manner to serve the world's growing population and create a better future.

Chevron's Human Rights Policy, available on our website, reinforces Chevron's commitment to respecting human rights. It covers employees and the communities where they live and work, security providers, suppliers, contractors, and other business partners. Related processes provide direction on management of potential human rights issues, such as resettlement, grievances, and relationships with indigenous peoples. In 2019, the Company updated its Human Rights Policy to more clearly state its continuing support for international human rights, including its commitment to respect the principles set out in the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and in the International Labor Organization Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work, and its commitment to adhere to the United Nations Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, the Voluntary Principles on Security and Human Rights, and the International Finance Corporation's Performance standards.

Chevron engages with stakeholders, investors, civil society organizations, customers, and other third parties, on an ongoing basis to inform its approach to human rights issues. Learn more at https://www.chevron.com/sustainability."
