In response, Gap sent the following statement:

“Thank you for your invitation to respond regarding Gap Inc.’s actions to address climate change and U.S. Chamber of Commerce membership. Gap Inc. is not a member of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. We do participate in their international programming, but our contributions and our participation do not in any way contribute to the Chamber’s domestic positions on climate.

Climate change is an issue that is of utmost importance to our company. We believe that action on climate change is not an option, but an imperative. At Gap Inc, we’re working towards cutting greenhouse gas emissions from our global facilities in half by the end of 2020, diverting waste from our U.S. facilities, and partnering with our suppliers around the world to adopt more sustainable manufacturing practices.

Gap Inc. was an early and active supporter of the Paris Agreement and we were proud to join the We Mean Business coalition to support the creation of greater economic opportunity through bold climate action. Additionally, Gap Inc. was one of more than 1,000 companies that signed the Business Backs Low-Carbon USA statement, urging continuation of U.S. involvement in the Paris Agreement.

Earlier this year, when the United States’ continued participation in the Paris Agreement began to be questioned, we signed onto a full-page “letter to the President” ad with 30 other leading companies, outlining the ways in which U.S. involvement in the Paris Agreement would benefit U.S. businesses and the economy.

Gap Inc. joined the We Are Still In initiative to reiterate our commitment to bold climate action. We will continue to work with like-minded businesses, NGOs and other stakeholders to support solutions that will create a more sustainable and economically strong future for the people and communities touched by our business around the world.

Gap Inc. remains steadfast in our support for a low-carbon economy as the right path forward for future business growth and job creation, human health and the environment. We remain focused on doing our part to achieve the sustainability goals we’ve set.”
